2. To introduce students to the changing historical factors which affected the changes in ideas and institutions between the post-Gupta up to the Islamic invasions.
3. To acquaint students with the debates and scholarship revolving around the existence of Feudalism in India.
4. To provide them the knowledge of the various religious traditions emerging and spreading during the Early Medieval period which include Puranic Hinduism, Tanticism etc.

Course Description

The paper aims to teach the details of several aspects and characteristics of the Early Medieval society and polity and seeks to explain historical factors responsible for the development of Indian feudalism and evolution of the political structures of early-medieval north and south India. They can learn how the decline of the Guptas ended the long spell of the ancient era and ushered in a new period with distinctly identifiable characteristics. The paper seeks to explain the transformed Indian culture, society, religion and agrarian structures under the more fragmented, decentralized, and regional political powers.
